@JustinWolfers I will say it again. There's like no inflation in America. It's not like real wages have been hitting it out of the park.

Pretty bold, @POTUS to blame this on cable news & @twitter just days after FBI Director endorses "Ferguson effect."

> Let me be as clear as I can be. I reject any narrative that seeks to divide police and communities they serve; that frames any discussion of public safety around "us" and "them" – a narrative that too often gets served up to us by cable news seeking ratings, tweets seeking retweets, or political candidates seeking some attention. It's hard to believe, but politicians do that. Because your work – your service – really has helped make America safer than it's been in decades. That's something of which every American should be proud.

> We must change the way utilities make money. Today the incentives are backwards. The less we conserve, the more carbon we emit, the more money utilities earn. We'll change that with energy efficiency targets for utilities and incentives for saving power instead of generating more of it. This seemingly simple change, called decoupling, has transformational potential

The most interesting passage from Ted Cruz's hourlong speech on the Senate floor tonight.

> On the Democratic side, the major donors that fund the Democratic Party, they don't despise their base. The billionaires who write the giant checks that fund President Obama and Hillary Clinton and the Democrats on that side of the aisle, they don't despise the radical gay rights movement or the radical environmentalist movement or all of the people that knock on doors and get Democrats elected. The simple reality is a very large percentage of the Republican donors actively despise our base, actively despise the men and women who showed up and voted you and me into office. I can tell you when you sit down and talk with a New York billionaire Republican donor -- and I have talked with quite a few New York billionaire Republican donors, California Republican donors, their questions start out as follows. First of all, you've got to come out for

This seems...ill considered and ill advised.

> Our union drive has expressed at every stage of the process that one of our core goals is to protect the editorial independence of Gawker Media sites from the influence of business-side concerns. Today's unprecedented breach of the firewall, in which business executives deleted an editorial post over the objections of the entire executive editorial staff, demonstrated exactly why we seek greater protection. Our opinions on the post are not unanimous but we are united in objecting to editorial decisions being made by a majority of non-editorial managers. Disagreements about editorial judgment are matters to be resolved by editorial employees. We condemn the takedown in the strongest possible terms.

investigative journa ou're giving them too much room for

Copy

Trust matters. Don't believe your folks on the morning conference call who tell you it doesn't. They're only worried about winning, because it makes them rich. Winning makes you president, so you need to take the right road to victory.

Staying the course might get you elected (Republicans are fully capable of nominating somebody who makes you the least-worst alternative), but it will leave you a diminished leader: No trust, no mandate, no ability to unite the country or represent more than the most

Scalia dissent was cranky, but Thomas actually argues that slavery & internment camps weren't so bad #SCOTUSMarriage

> The corollary of that principle is that human dignity cannot be taken away by the government. Slaves did not lose their dignity (any more than they lost their humanity) because the government allowed them to be enslaved. Those held in internment camps did not lose their dignity because the government confined them. And those denied governmental benefits certainly do not lose their dignity because the government denies them those benefits. The government cannot bestow dignity, and it cannot take it away.

@neeratanden Imagine what Jefferson would have thought about our wealth distribution. salon.com/2015/06/01/wel...

> The idea of a property-owning democracy has long roots in American political thought. In their book, "The Citizens Share," Joseph R. Blasi, Richard B. Freeman and Douglas Kruse argue that the Founding Fathers wanted everyone (well, everyone who was white and male) to own a small slice of property. Both Madison and Washington praised the relatively equal distribution of property in the United States (compared with Europe). Thomas Jefferson wrote, "It is not too soon to provide by every possible means that as few as possible be without a little portion of land. The small landholders are the most precious part of a state." Indeed, the concept is still popular today, even on the right.

Have Democrats Pulled Too Far Left?

Those who insist that the Democratic Party's march to the left carries no political risks might consider the fate of the British Labour Party earlier this month. Ed Miliband, its leader, ran hard to the left. The result? The Conservative Party under David Cameron won its first outright majority in Parliament since 1992. Before the election, the former Labour prime minister Tony Blair warned his party against letting the election become one in which "a traditional left-wing party competes with a traditional right-wing party, with the traditional result."

poverty. That is to say: the countries of the Northern Triangle need more effective governing institutions and greater contributions from all levels of society throughout the region, including the private sector, to create sustainable security and economic environments.

Create and support robust state security institutions

On the security front, the countries of the Northern Triangle lack the professional police forces, credible judiciaries, and active-duty militaries needed to protect their citizens from burgeoning criminal gangs. International actors, including the United States, can and should assist in the creation of these institutions, but all the assistance in the world will not succeed absent a whole-society commitment to building and sustaining those institutions.

How to get into Harvard lrb.co.uk/blog/2015/04/2…

> WikiLeaks has published the Sony emails that had been hacked last November, and made them searchable by keyword. In 2014, a senior executive emailed an Ivy League vice-president of philanthropy: he'd like to endow a scholarship, anonymously, 'at the $1mm level'. In another email, he tells a development officer that his daughter is applying to the college as her first choice. It's all very decorous. The development staff arrange a 'customised' campus tour for his daughter and a meeting with the university's president; but he asks for no favours and nothing is promised. An email from the president says that his daughter's application will be looked at 'very closely'. She gets in. He writes to his sister: 'David... called me. he is obsessed with getting his eldest in Harvard next year.' She replies: 'If David wants to get his daughter in he should obviously start giving money.' Obviously.
